Vitus Bering

A Case of Mistaken Identity
“Soon the ship is without a captain, as Bering joins the list of men at Death’s door.”
On December 8, Captain–Commander Bering died, from whom this island later got its name.
Being received those orders at St. Petersburg, they sailedshape up in 1722. To carry our boat and the people for the shal...the boat and four men to Russia’s Pacific coast. There were few roads and the journey was difficult. Being assisted by two locksmiths, Matvei Babakin and Afanasi Chitchichen, they left from January 1723 until the spring of 1728 when they arrived at Kamchatka Peninsula after a voyage of 6,000 miles by boat. The ship Captain was launched. A month after the St. Catherine went to sea.

Some think Bering has failed
Bering’s second voyage lasted only a month. Bering and his party sailed north along the Siberia coast through what was later named Bering Strait. The area was of interest to the Russians, but the crew was forced to return due to bad weather. Bering and his crew returned to St. Petersburg and made the ship Captain in March 1728. After returning from Siberia, Bering sailed the ship Captain to the Kamchatka Peninsula in 1728.

Bering suggests a second expedition
Bering answered the criticism of his first expedition by suggesting a second voyage. The new expedition would investigate the unmapped areas of Siberia and search for a sea route to the east. In December of 1732, the Russian navy sent the ship Captain for Bering’s second chance as an explorer. Russia’s new department, Being seconded those orders at St. Petersburg, soon began to be worried. In 1719, being very ill, he asked for the East Indies, but the Emperor gave him the post of the official in charge of the Pacific Ocean. The mission started in 1720, and Bering's ship, the Nadezhda, was renamed the St. Nicholas.

Some think Bering has failed
The St. Nicholas' voyage lasted only a month. Bering and his party sailed north along the Siberian coast through what later was named Bering Strait and then west along the Pacific coast. After a few days, they were forced to return, having been defeated by the North American continent, which was then not known as Alaska. In 1730, Bering's ship, the Nadezhda, was renamed the St. Nicholas.

Bering suggests a second expedition
Bering was the second of the first expeditions by suggesting a second expedition. The machine would be under the command of a new Russian government, and the expedition was to explore the Pacific Ocean along the Siberian coast. The mission started in 1720, but Bering's ship, the Nadezhda, was renamed the St. Nicholas.

Men were continually dying. Our plight was so wretched that the dead had to lie for a considerable time among the living, for there was none able to drag the corpses away, nor were those who still lived capable of moving away from the dead...

Captain-Commander Bering died on 8th December. His corpse was tied fast to a plank and thrust down into the ground. None of the other dead were buried with a plank.
